Chancellor Search Committee Reviews Applications

The committee that will identify the next Chancellor for Fayetteville State University (FSU) met Wednesday, December 19, in the J.C. Jones Board Room of the Charles W. Chesnutt Library.

"We received applications from all over the country and have some very well-qualified candidates," said John Ben Brown, chairman of the Search Committee. "The committee feels, that among the applicants that will be invited for interviews, there is a candidate who can lead Fayetteville State University to new heights and take it to the highest levels of academia."

The committee will identify three candidates to be interviewed by University of North Carolina President Erskine Bowles. Bowles will select the individual who will become the new Chancellor.

Founded in 1867, FSU is the second-oldest public institution in North Carolina and one of the oldest historically black colleges and universities in the south. A constituent institution of the University of North Carolina, FSU has an enrollment of nearly 6,700 students and a faculty of more than 200. The university is fully accredited by the Southern Association of Colleges and Schools and offers 70 undergraduate and graduate degrees in the arts and sciences, business and economics, and education.
