

Greetings, I am Glenwood Avery. A junior here at Fayetteville State University with a major in Criminal Justice and a minor in psychology.

Well Fayetteville State is a prestigious institution and holds its own legacy. As you can see within 150 years of this great legacy it has impacted not just the community but the world.

Yes, I have had positive experiences with instructors here at Fayetteville State University. I recently got connect with one, Ms. Bianca Bright, she's currently my criminal justice advisor. She has made so many different connections for me within networking which has set up job opportunities and possibly careers.

I would definitely say I love Fayetteville State University. It may be small but it's a more family oriented school so everyone knows everyone. You can definitely get connected with who you need to get connected to. Definitely running for a leadership position is very beneficial. It helps you gain personal development and professionalism.

I am proud to be a Bronco here at Fayetteville State University. And bronco pride is a prestigious legacy that lives within Fayetteville State University. It's within you. You have to show you have bronco pride.
