

My name is Miles Hesner and I'm a senior at Fayetteville State University. I'm a Business major with a concentration in Entrepreneurship and of course what I want to be in life is an entrepreneur.

I guess what attracted me to entrepreneurship I guess is really the freedom and time to do what you want to do in life. And also um, I guess what else I would say is kind of just creating something from nothing. Bringing something into existence is what really attracted me as well.

My plans for after Fayetteville State University is actually to relocate to Atlanta to start my company there.

One of my classes was business, I believe it was 215, which was Business Ethics, and to start I wasn't really interested in it because I figured you know, I'm already an ethical person so why would I need to take that. But during the class period the professor – I guess we got on the subject of entrepreneurship or socio-entrepreneurship and she did a really good job of noticing my interest in that and kind of cultivating a little bit. And putting me in touch with a faculty that was actually a socio-entrepreneurship teacher.

I got involved in a lot of clubs on campus and that really changed my aspect on it. Or changed my, I guess, my kind of place in mind of Fayetteville State University.

Before the course, I just kind thought it was you know, a regular school I could say. Especially being a HBCU. This is my first experience of being on an HBCU campus. But really being involved in the student life kind of changed my aspect and my appearance of it.

I'm proud to be a bronco because ultimately my experiences at Fayetteville State University have shaped who I am and the person who I'm becoming. Bronco pride!
