

I am Kyrsteyn Jackson. I am a social work major and I'm a junior.

I decided to come to Fayetteville State because it was closer to home. I heard a lot of great things about Fayetteville State and it was very cost efficient.

After I get my master's, I do want to open up a group home for troubled teens just because I had a lot of troubled friends they would confide into me about problems they were having and stuff and I felt like I was giving good advice. And they would tell me I was giving good advice so I wanted to help people. That's always something I wanted to do.

One professor that was very helpful to me was Ms. Erica Campbell. She was always straight forward with us and I really like that she let us know, you know, in the real world it's not easy but it is doable.

Well Fayetteville State is a very family oriented – I love Fayetteville State just because it feels like one big family. Like every time I go home for break I'm just like – I'm home with family but when I get back to school I'm also with family. It makes you feel like you're at home. Like when I first got here I didn't feel uncomfortable at all and people are so welcoming here and because it's a smaller campus I think that really helped me like get out of my shell and actually want to do other things.

This school is just so, like the history behind this school will really make you proud to go here. Like it makes you proud to say yeah, I go to Fayetteville State. And some people don't look into history of schools and coming in as a freshman I did the cheer scholars program and they kind of tapped it into your head like what the history was behind the school and after that I was like, "wow I didn't know that." So it made me really proud to come here.
