

FSU's Online Criminal Justice Program Ranked No. 10 in the Country

Fayetteville State University's (FSU) Online Criminal Justice Degree Program is one of the nation's best, according to The Best Schools. The Best Schools did a ranking of the nation's top 25 programs and FSU was No. 10 on the list. No other North Carolina institution was ranked.

To be selected, The Best Schools identified the degree programs based on quality and range of courses provided, school awards, rankings and reputation. TheBestSchools.org formulates its rankings based on five informational categories (six, when considering online schools). The major metrics and qualities used for rankings are:

- Academic excellence based on a school's curriculum generally or within the selected discipline
- Strength of faculty scholarship
- Reputation
- Financial aid
- Range of degree programs
- Strength of online instruction methodology

The criminal justice curriculum holds certification from the Academy of Criminal Justice Sciences and comprises 82 upper-level credit hours. Students earning the online criminal justice degree explore criminological theory, criminal justice ethics, criminal law, police and society, and prisons and society. Available electives include white collar crime; restorative justice; comparative criminal justice; and sex, sexuality, and the law.
